Health Information: New Directions Joint Conference Of The Health Libraries Sections Of The Australian Library And Information Association And New Zealand Library Association 12-16 November 1989, Auckland, New Zealand Proceedings

by New Zealand Library Association Australian Library and Information Association
This document contains various entries related to librarianship, information science, and technology. It includes conference proceedings, articles, and bibliographic entries. The text is a mixture of academic and professional information, discussing topics such as information literacy, technical standards, and the use of technology in libraries.

- Conferences and events: The text includes details about various conferences and events, such as the Biennial Conference of the Library and Information Association and the Joint Conference of the Health Libraries Sections of the Australian Library and Information Association and New Zealand Library Association. These events focus on topics like health information, user information needs, and technical standards.

- Academic publications: Several academic publications are mentioned, including articles on information science, methodologies, and the use of technology in libraries.

- Organizations: The text references organizations such as the Australian Library and Information Association (ALIA), the Canadian Association of Research Libraries (CARL), and the New Zealand Library Association (NZL). These organizations are involved in various aspects of librarianship and information science.

- Technical standards: The document discusses technical standards for libraries and information centers, including the International Federation of Library Associations and Institutions (IFLA) and the Association of Research Libraries (ARL).

- Bibliographic entries: The text includes various bibliographic entries, such as journal articles, conference proceedings, and book publications. These entries provide insights into the latest research and developments in the field.

Overall, the document is a rich resource for those interested in librarianship, information science, and technology, providing a comprehensive overview of the latest trends, research, and developments in these fields.