Merleau-Ponty on Perception and Imagination Chapter 9: Making . 2 May 2018 . Maurice Merleau-Ponty, (born March 14, 1908, Rochefort, France.—died May 4, 1961, Paris), philosopher and man of letters, was the leading exponent of phenomenology in the French-speaking world. He was a key figure in the development of Continental European philosophy, particularly in the fields of phenomenology, existentialism, and ontology. His work has had a significant impact on a wide range of disciplines, including philosophy, psychology, sociology, and critical theory.

Merleau-Ponty was born on March 14, 1908, in Rochefort-sur-Mer, France. As with many of his generation, Merleau-Ponty lost his father to the war. His father, a war hero, was killed in World War I. He completed his philosophy degree at the University of Paris and later became a professor at the Sorbonne. He was a key figure in the development of Continental European philosophy, particularly in the fields of phenomenology, existentialism, and ontology. His work has had a significant impact on a wide range of disciplines, including philosophy, psychology, sociology, and critical theory.

Merleau-Ponty describes how the lived body makes sense of experience in the phenomenal world. When I begin to reflect my experience consciousness, I find that I am a body. The body is the starting point of all experience. It is the basis of all perception, action, and self. It is also the starting point of all thought. The body is the starting point of all thought. It is the basis of all perception, action, and self. It is also the starting point of all thought. The body is the starting point of all experience.

The philosophy of Maurice Merleau-Ponty, from its very beginnings, seeks to find sense or meaning within the phenomenon of the world. When I begin to reflect my experience consciousness, I find that I am a body. The body is the starting point of all experience. It is the basis of all perception, action, and self. It is also the starting point of all thought. The body is the starting point of all thought. It is the basis of all perception, action, and self. It is also the starting point of all thought. The body is the starting point of all experience.
